Sheraton Ottawa Hotel

Ottawa, June 3-5, 2023

Organizer: Adriana Koliijn is a PhD candidate in the Department of Modern Languages and Literatures at the University of Ottawa. Her areas of study are ecocriticism and modern Latin American literature. In particular her thesis focuses on Mexican and Central American literature.

Session Title: Ecological Conversations in Hispanic Studies in Canada

Last year, 188 governments passed a landmark agreement at the UN Biodiversity Conference COP 15 in Montreal. The agreement promises to protect 30% of the planet from further development by 2030. This move indicates an increasing need to think about the interrelationships between the human and other-than-human world, signaling a shift in conversations concerning humanity's place on the planet. The field of ecocriticism provides a perfect critical space to develop these ideas as well as a discourse concerning the interconnection between life in all its forms and how literary and cultural studies can contribute to this conversation. The aim of this panel is to provide a space for ecocritics in Hispanism or associated with it to share their work and inspire other scholars to join in the conversation as the need for ecological dialogue becomes increasingly urgent and necessary in the face of the current climate crisis. The panel welcomes proposals on any theme related to a discussion of Peninsular or Latin American literatures and cultures through an ecocritical perspective. The duration of each presentation will be 15-20 minutes. Abstracts may be submitted in English, French or Spanish.

These themes may include:

1. Animal and plant studies
2. Biodiversity
3. Ecofeminism
4. Ecopoetry
